

Small ISPs serve many small and local communities throughout the. considering that the larger servers already control 95% of the isps, it seems silly to try and take the last 5% which allows consumers to have some choice whom they wish to use as their server; a locally controlled server or a large corporation who is not sensitive to the needs of smaller communities. Smaller servers are better able to serve the needs of their community and in my experience interface with the customer much more easily. Having a choice is always better than being forced into not having one. I request that you do not allow Bell South, Verizon and Qwest to effectively remove small independent ISPs. What will they gain by this? Thank you for considering my comments.
